

IS YOUR CHURCH PREPARED FOR A CRISIS?

In a crisis situation, one response does not fit all.

Anticipating and avoiding potential conflicts on your premises is essential, and there are many verbal and non-verbal cues which can be identified by a trained eye as situations unfold.

Knowing you have trained staff or volunteers that can react calmly and effectively to any situation is an important factor in maintaining the peace and serenity of your place of worship.

If you're concerned your church's security isn't effective, consider the following questions:

- Have you identified how/where you are vulnerable and how you can protect your congregation?
- Do you have trained personnel protecting important assets in your church?
- Are your volunteers following best practices within the children's ministry?
- Do you have a written and practiced plan in place in the event a conflict occurs?
- Do you have a procedure to identify a threat before it escalates in your facility?
- Does your security team train as a unit for the full range of possible natural or man-made disasters?
- Do you have an evacuation plan and do your volunteers and security team know what it is?
- Is your offering collection/accounting/deposit procedure secure?
- Has leadership informed the congregation of the safety procedures which are in place?
- Has your church had a recent security vulnerability assessment completed by church security experts who understand the unique needs of faith-based organizations?

If you answered "No" to any of these questions, appropriate improvements to your security plan need to be implemented.
